Big Banks Hurt Small Businesses and Retailers With Swipe Fees

According to a recent survey, 63% of voters who supported President-elect Donald Trump believe that big banks are taking advantage of retailers of all sizes who create jobs in our local communities and more than half of these same voters oppose swipe fees of any kind.

The Facts Speak For Themselves...

of Trump voters think banks are taking advantage of retailers of voters believe big banks already got a bailout while millions of Americans suffered of Trump voters view Wells Fargo favorably of voters view Bank of America favorably

Thanks to well-established reforms passed by Congress, competition has been introduced to the debit card market. Now, the biggest banks and their allies with the most access are gearing up to repeal these sensible safeguards.

Changes to these reforms would:

Eliminate competition in the debit market

Raise costs on every business that accepts debit cards

Enrich the biggest banks, specifically Wells Fargo, Bank of America and JPMorgan

Drive up costs for consumers

This doesn't sound like the change voters demanded at the ballot box in November. Now is not the time to hurt America's retailers and consumers with another bailout of the biggest banks.
