House Agriculture Committee

For almost 200 years, the committee has established farm policy for agriculture and rural America. The committee has jurisdiction over matters such as agricultural markets and finance, innovation, trade and food aid, the farm economy, conservation and forestry, food labeling and transparency, as well as nutrition including federal programs such as SNAP.

Led by Chairman Collin Peterson, his priorities for the committee include finding “ways to address the diverse needs of agriculture in regions with very different products, climates and experiences” and “continue to work together to find ways to not only support our nation’s agricultural production but also to ensure that American consumers continue to have access to the world’s safest, most abundant food and agriculture products.”
